

The Feel Great System Coaching Program

This program is designed to provide tools and systems to aid clients in achieving their health and weight loss goals. The Feel Great System is the main tool recommended for each client but additional tools are described here which can be used at the discretion of the coach and client.

Please note: All tools are meant as a starting point for the coach but should be modified and adjusted based on the individual needs of the clients. Defer to your intuition and always involve the client in creating the plan that will best serve them.

These worksheets are also meant to be a starting point but feel free to recreate them in your own branding and with any modifications you wish to make.

Session 1: Intentions and Exploration

Use these prompts to help discover the client's intention and provide coaching as needed. Focus on having an abundant "why" and on belief in their ability to succeed.

What result does the client hope to achieve?

Why do they want it?

What work have they done in the past to try to achieve this result?

What went well in the past? What didn't?

How confident are they that they can achieve this goal?

What would help them be more confident? What do they believe is necessary to succeed?

Homework: Order the Feel Great System and start using it. Add other things as needed based on the desired result. ie: keep a food log, journal about your reason, find evidence that you are capable of achieving it etc...)

Session 2: Decisions and Commitment

Use these prompts to help your client make decisions and be committed to following through. Make sure there are no "shoulds" or decisions from guilt/shame.

What percentage of "joy" is coming from food? Is this a percentage the client likes? Why or why not?

What role do they want food to play? What will their food protocol be?

If food is going to play less of a joy role, how will they replace the joy?

How committed is the client? Why or why not? What would help?

Teach the client the power of honoring commitments to self.

Additional notes:

Homework: Keep using the Feel Great System and check in on how it's going. Keep a food log and journal 2-3 times this week about how it feels to honor the plan they made in advance.

Session 3: Creating a Plan

After exploring the client's food log from last session, use these prompts to help your client create a plan for what and when they will eat this week. Take into consideration your client's goals and create a plan accordingly.

Look over client's food log. Discuss what parts of their routine they want to keep and what they are willing to change to achieve their goals.

Work together to create a protocol based on what the client wants and what you recommend they try out. This may be a macro plan/ a meal plan/ or just what the client believes will get them there.

What is going to make following this plan difficult? How will the client navigate this?

Check in with the client's emotional state. Coach to get them to motivated or committed if possible.

Additional notes:

Homework: Follow the protocol as outlined today. Aim for consistency not perfection. Keep using the Feel Great System to aid in your journey. Encourage the client to track what they eat and when. Use MFP if you choose. If appropriate, have the client begin weighing daily or tracking progress in some other way.

Session 4+: Follow Up

Explore how it went for the client last week when following a pre-determined eating plan. Coach around successes and failures to keep the client off the roller coaster and onto a more neutral way of viewing their progress. This will be the general format for all sessions going forward. Use the supplemental worksheets as needed in each session.

How did it go last week? Wins? Challenges?

How is the client feeling/thinking about their efforts and results?

Are there any changes to the plan that need to be made this week based on how it went or on what's in the client's schedule for the week?

Check in with the client's emotional state. Coach to get them to motivated or committed if possible. Use supplemental worksheets as needed to add tools or help them stay on track.

Additional notes:

Homework: Follow the protocol as outlined today. Aim for consistency not perfection. Keep using the Feel Great System to aid in your journey. Keep tracking food and weight if appropriate.

Counting Macros

Teach the client about macronutrients and help them create a macro plan that will help them achieve their goals. Use this worksheet to guide you whenever you want to incorporate this tool for your client.

Teach the client about calories, macronutrients, micronutrients and timing of eating and how each of these can contribute to their goal achievement.

If necessary, use a calculator to figure out your client's macronutrient plan/goal based on their desired result: <https://www.calculator.net/macro-calculator.html>

Encourage your client to use My Fitness Pal (must pay for premium upgrade) to make tracking macros simpler. Remind them there will be a learning curve.

Help the client think through foods and meals that will help them achieve the protein goal (this is the hardest for clients).

Coach the client to avoid perfectionism both with tracking and with following the plan. This will likely be ongoing coaching you'll do with the client.

Intermittent Fasting

Teach the client why it's useful/necessary to have periods of the day when they allow insulin to come down by not always eating/snacking. Develop a plan for intermittent fasting that your client feels good about.

What are the clients' thoughts/experience with intermittent fasting? How many meals/snacks to they normally eat per day?

What time do they normally eat their first/last meal of the day? What would happen if they expanded their normal night time fasting window by pushing breakfast a little later or stopping eating a bit earlier?

If your client is using a CGM, ask them to notice what happens to blood sugar levels during a fasting window. Notice the fluctuation due to things outside of food.

Coach your client around all or nothing mentality if necessary. Remember that they can begin "fasting" by just cutting out one or more snacks that they usually have.

If your client is ready for a more aggressive fast, define a fasting and eating window and help them think through what that will be like.

Hunger

Use this worksheet to address your client's levels of hunger and relationship with hunger. Remember that some hunger is normal if in a calorie deficit and indicates metabolic health. Extreme hunger is likely low blood sugar and not healthy either.

How much hunger is the client experiencing? Is it enough? Is it too much? How do they feel about it overall?

If the client is not experiencing hunger, is a week of increased calories possibly necessary to get the metabolism going again? What might this look like?

If the client is experiencing an excess of hunger, what changes in types of food, timing, combinations or quality of micronutrients might be necessary?

Does the client have overall thoughts or experiences with hunger that require coaching?

Using a CGM

For clients who are up for it, a CGM can give valuable insight and provide motivation for staying on track. Help your client navigate it with this worksheet. I like the Stelo by Dexcom ($89 per month) but you can suggest whatever you like for your client to use.

How can additional data (from the CGM) be useful? Why might the client want to add this tool? What fears/concerns do they have if any. Provide coaching as needed.

Teach your client about insulin and why the body can't access fat when insulin is present. Using a CGM can provided valuable insight and motivation to keep you on track.

When your client begins getting data, provide ongoing coaching so as not to shift into guilt/shame when the data doesn't look great or to make it mean anything dramatic even when it does look good.

What does your client notice about hunger vs. low blood sugar. Are they always the same? What does the client feel in their body when blood sugar is high? Can they detect it physically?

What insights do they have after wearing the CGM for a while? How can they use this to make better decisions about food and exercise?

Exercise and Movement

Use this worksheet to guide your client around the topic of movement and exercise.

How much movement does the client currently get? If more is needed, what would be a step they could take that they are willing to commit to and why?

What forms of exercise have they found to be challenging to maintain consistently and what forms do they enjoy? How open are they to trying new things? How willing are they to make this a regular part of life and what would make it more fun?

Strength training is an important and often neglected part of metabolic health for most people. When your client is ready, introduce ways to incorporate regular strength training that work for them and create protocol around it.

Incorporate regular follow up on movement and exercise in coaching sessions. Find out the client's thoughts/feelings about the topic and note how they play out in their actions.

Discuss the importance 7,000 - 10,000 steps per day with regards to metabolic health. Find out if the client has a step counter (fitbit/ apple watch or phone that tracks steps) and encourage use of this tool if needed.

Body Love

Use this worksheet with clients who have negative thoughts about their bodies.

What does the client's internal dialog about their body sound like. How much is this helping or hindering their health efforts? Provide coaching.

What is the purpose of a body? What "should" a body look like? Is your client's answer to these questions working for them? Do they want to shift it at all?

What is the difference between working on your body because you hate it and working on it because you love it? Help your client see this and explore it.

What old patterns or bad examples does your client have about bodies? Help them become aware and be fascinated but not attached to them going forward.

How much time does your client spend being in their body and feeling their body with gratitude and love? Help them become more embodied and more grateful to their body through coaching.

Drink Your Water

Drinking enough water is the easiest step that can make the biggest impact right away for your client. Use this worksheet to help them create this habit.

How much water do they currently drink? Help them commit to 1/2 their body weight in oz. of water per day. ie: For someone who weights 200 lbs: Half of 200 is 100 so they should drink 100 oz of water per day.

What other beverages does the client drink? If using the Feel Great System, do they have a useful routine for drinking 2 Unimate per day? Can they add more water as well?

What will be challenging about getting all their water in? What can help them overcome this challenge?

Follow up on water consumption regularly in coaching sessions and provide ongoing support as needed.

How much time does your client spend being in their body and feeling their body with gratitude and love? Help them become more embodied and more grateful to their body through coaching.

Falling Off the Wagon

When the client is struggling to eat on plan or feels bad for "falling off the wagon," use this to help them get back on track and to stop feeling bad about where they are.

What did they eat that was not on plan? Be specific. List everything.

What are you making this mean about yourself and your ability to achieve your goals? Is this explanation serving you?

What do you want to make it mean that you ate this food? (Provide coaching to help them get a a more useful explanation)

How can you be kind and compassionate to your past self and still hold yourself accountable to what you want going forward?

What intentions/ plans do you want to set for this upcoming week? What will be doable and get you back on track? Be specific and only pick things you can fully commit to.

You're Doin' It!

When your client has a successful week defined by consistent behaviors and/or is getting the results they want, use this worksheet to ensure they stay on track.

When the client finds the scale is down (or whatever metric they are watching is moving in the right direction), what do they make it mean?

Is their answer useful? Does it make the success too big leading to disappointment when things aren't on track? Coach around this if so.

If your client is used to celebrating with food, they may be tempted to sabotage their success. Discuss this and coach around other ways to congratulate themselves.

What things are changing outside of the scale or measurable results? Is the client noticing better habits, a healthier relationship with self etc?

How much is your client able to tolerate success and positive results? Oddly enough many of us buffer away from feeling proud or good. Coach your client if this is the case.

Planning for Vacations or Holidays

Use this worksheet to help your client make decisions ahead of time when they will be outside of their usual routine.

What is the change in schedule happening and what will be the eating situation?

What intention does the client want to set for the trip or holiday? ie: Prioritize protein and water or track my food as best I can, eat what I feel like but pay attention to my body, or stay on the FGS but allow myself to eat more food than usual etc...

What potential obstacles do they see to sticking with their intention?

What plans/preparation can they do now to ensure they can follow their intention during the trip or holiday?

What does your client choose to believe about themselves and their ability to be who they want with food on a trip or during holidays? Coach them as needed.

Emotional Eating and Urges to Eat

Use this worksheet to help your client handle cravings, urges, and emotional eating.

What does a craving or urge feel like in your body? How long does it last? What happens if you answer it? What happens if you don't?

Is there an emotion you are avoiding feeling by eating the food? If so what is the emotion? What does it feel like? What would happen if you just allowed the feeling?

What is going on in your life and your mind that is creating the emotions you are avoiding?

What might we discover about your life if we let emotions linger? Is there anything you're afraid of there? (Coach as needed).

When you eat off plan and don't achieve your goals, what emotion are you left feeling? Is that emotion better, worse, or the same as the one you are avoiding with food? (Coach as needed here).
